The Contemporary Issues of Native America course (Anthro 370), the Certificate Program in Native American and Indigenous Studies (CPNAIS) and the Department of Anthropology invite you to join us for a talk by Kristen Wyman.

"Wampum Energetics: Sustainability in the Arts"
On March 23, Room E-37 (Machmer Building), at 2:30 pm.

Kristen Wyman is a member of the Natick Nipmuc tribe of Massachusetts. Kristen actively is working to secure access to land, environmental justice and rights to self-determination for tribal peoples of New England. Kristen worked as Development Director at Acadia Center (a clean energy advocacy organization) and recently returned to full-time community-based work with Gedakina, a nonprofit cultural revitalization organization for Native youth and families. Kristen is particularly interested in sustainable community development for the economically disadvantaged through culturally-responsive schooling and teachings of resilience and adaptation. Also, Kristen is interested in Individual and community-driven examples of climate action, the role of art in activism and/or addressing social, environmental problems, and Decolonizing environmentalism.
