Summer Session 1 • May 16-June 24

HIST 389: U.S. Women's History since 1890

Wolfe: jwolfe@history.umass.edu

This course is designed for those interested in women's history, women's leadership, and feminism. The course will cover the history of women's rights and the development of the feminist movement in the United States. Students will learn about the social, political, and economic changes that have affected women's lives over the past century. The course will also examine the role of women in the Civil Rights movement and the origins of the feminist movement. The course will include readings from primary and secondary sources, lectures, and discussions. The course will be offered online, and students will be expected to participate in online discussions and complete assignments online. The course will be worth 4 credits.

HIST 151: U.S. History since 1876

For more information or to request a syllabus, contact Professor Sandy: jsandybailey@admin.umass.edu.

This course examines the major events, themes and topics in the political, economic and cultural development of the United States from 1876 to the present. The course will cover the major developments of the 20th century, including the Great Depression, World War II, the Civil Rights movement, and the Cold War. The course will also examine the major developments of the 21st century, including the War on Terror, the Great Recession, and the rise of new industries and technologies. The course will be offered online, and students will be expected to participate in online discussions and complete assignments online. The course will be worth 4 credits.

HIST 170: Indigenous Peoples of North America

This course offers a basic introduction to the major world religions and traditions: Asian, Middle Eastern, and Western. From international politics to personal spirituality, religion matters more than ever today. This course will address the contentious role the United States has played in the region.

HIST 121: Modern Latin America

This course examines the significant themes, trends, and debates that have shaped modern Irish history over the past three centuries. Topics covered include: The 1798 Rebellion, the Troubles, the Northern Irish Peace Process, and the political, cultural, and economic developments to the end of the 19th century and relates this experience to contemporary issues of underdevelopment, and especially India. The third unit explores gender as a category of analysis in world history.

Fall Session • Sept 6-Dec 22

HIST 389: U.S. Women's History since 1890

Wolfe: jwolfe@history.umass.edu

This course is designed for those interested in women's history, women's leadership, and feminism. The course will cover the history of women's rights and the development of the feminist movement in the United States. Students will learn about the social, political, and economic changes that have affected women's lives over the past century. The course will also examine the role of women in the Civil Rights movement and the origins of the feminist movement. The course will include readings from primary and secondary sources, lectures, and discussions. The course will be offered online, and students will be expected to participate in online discussions and complete assignments online. The course will be worth 4 credits.

HIST 151: U.S. History since 1876

For more information or to request a syllabus, contact Professor Sandy: jsandybailey@admin.umass.edu.

This course examines the major events, themes and topics in the political, economic and cultural development of the United States from 1876 to the present. The course will cover the major developments of the 20th century, including the Great Depression, World War II, the Civil Rights movement, and the Cold War. The course will also examine the major developments of the 21st century, including the War on Terror, the Great Recession, and the rise of new industries and technologies. The course will be offered online, and students will be expected to participate in online discussions and complete assignments online. The course will be worth 4 credits.

HIST 170: Indigenous Peoples of North America

This course offers a basic introduction to the major world religions and traditions: Asian, Middle Eastern, and Western. From international politics to personal spirituality, religion matters more than ever today. This course will address the contentious role the United States has played in the region.

HIST 121: Modern Latin America

This course examines the significant themes, trends, and debates that have shaped modern Irish history over the past three centuries. Topics covered include: The 1798 Rebellion, the Troubles, the Northern Irish Peace Process, and the political, cultural, and economic developments to the end of the 19th century and relates this experience to contemporary issues of underdevelopment, and especially India. The third unit explores gender as a category of analysis in world history.