Syllabus for Spring 2006

The OBJECTIVE OF THE COURSE is to explore, together, the nature of conscience and its interaction with law-- to try to grapple with fundamental issues of the human condition that are as old as Socrates' trial and as modern as war crimes in Sudan or the American response to international terrorism. This is an advanced course; and in addition to requiring that you be a senior or junior Legal Studies major, it assumes that each of you has had a reasonable amount of experience in thinking about the nature of law and about fundamental issues of ethics, conflict, and order in modern society. It is also a course that makes extensive use of literature as a framework for discussion, and that requires active participation in discussion of each work. There is a good deal of reading in the course; and I expect that you will devote considerable energy to the quality of your required writing assignments, whether short or long.

The course number and content--and the fact that this is a seminar--should make it clear that you should not be enrolled until you feel prepared to benefit from what I hope will be an intense, cooperative, and challenging experience. I urge you to think carefully about what is expected and what you are prepared to put into the course before deciding to take it. Please read the entire syllabus before making that decision. The course will be offered again. You may take it when you feel that you are prepared to benefit from it.

Because conscience is so often at odds with power, and because we expect that both will be part of the law, the issues raised in this course present a complex mix of rational analysis and personal reflection. To try to do justice to this complexity we will use literature and film to help us focus on dilemmas in which there is a tension between law and conscience. This is only one way to explore enduring questions about the nature of law. But it has the virtue of giving us a common starting point in the richness of literature and film. In conducting our exploration we shall be equally concerned with the individual struggle, the history, contemporaneous culture and politics that form the context of any struggle, and the nature of law. Issues of how group values (derived from subculture and heritage) affect law and conscience will arise in connection with a number of the works.

There may be themes in our discussions that might be described as jurisprudential, i.e. involving competing conceptions of the realities and philosophy of law; and there are sub-themes about the role of conscience in private and public life that may emerge. But our attention in each discussion will be directed primarily at the work that we are studying, not toward fitting that work within a pre-arranged outline of "important issues." In fact, there is no such pre-arranged outline. The most important work you will do in this course, therefore, is to think deeply enough about each play, novel, memoir, history, or film to formulate an understanding of each work and to arrive at your own judgments about the common themes that emerge as discussion proceeds. You will be asked to make your thinking about these themes a part of your writing in the course in two essays written during the semester and in one at the end of the course. For grades, attendance, participation, timely completion assignments, and active learning count heavily. There will be no exams, no lectures, and absolutely no tolerance for academic dishonesty.

YOUR TIME COMMITMENT

The class session of March 29, during which we see a film about Dr. King, runs to 5:30. If your schedule prevents you from staying late on this date, you must notify me immediately, since this may make it impossible for you to complete the course requirements.

Please note also that there are three very long books to read, Long Goodbye, Blind Ambition, and Rights on Trial. I have given extra time for these assignments by the scheduling of movies for which there is minimal preparation required and by dividing one book assignment into two halves. This can work well if you follow my suggestions in the syllabus and if you plan and manage your time effectively. Still, there is a good deal of reading; and you should consider carefully whether you are prepared to make the commitment to doing it completely and carefully.

This is a relatively small class based entirely on discussion. There will be no lectures and no tests. That means not only that your careful preparation before class and your thoughtful participation in class are essential, but that both preparation and participation should be based on the assumption that each person in the class has an equal responsibility with me to keep the discussion active, interesting, focused, and thoughtful. The reflection essay assignments (see below) should help you with this by encouraging you to come to class with comments, questions, and ideas already formed. It may seem a little primitive for an advanced class, but attendance will be required; and un-excused absences will lower your course grade.

REFLECTION ESSAYS

A reflection essay is required virtually every week. It must be handed in the day before class for written works on the syllabus, and two days after class for films shown in class. A reflection essay requires you to write 2 pages reflecting on some aspect or all of the reading or film for the class. No research is needed. It is your reflective personal, intellectual, and emotional reactions to the reading or viewing that interest me. These essays will not be graded; however, you must hand them in on time or you lose substantial credit from your final grade. There are twelve reflection essays assigned, and you will be permitted to miss two of these without penalty. Reflection essays are due in the designated box in the main Legal Studies office (102 Gordon Hall) no later than 4 p.m. on the Tuesday before the Wednesday in which the reading will be discussed (the film reflection essays are due no later than 2 p.m. on the Friday following the film.).

GRADING AND WRITING

This is a seminar-style course with high expectations for reading, writing, and discussion. If you are not a good reader and do not enjoy reading, you should reconsider taking this course. If you are unwilling to participate in discussion and only want to listen, or if you are unwilling to listen but only want to talk, you should also reconsider taking this course. Part of the purpose of this seminar is to learn how to take responsibility for contributing to a discussion, keeping it focused, and shaping its direction jointly with others. Good discussion also requires the development of the skill of careful listening. You should proceed on the assumption that the instructor is not the only person who has something to say that is worth thinking about or taking notes on. Grading will be based on 1) thoughtful class participation; 2) three essays, two of 5 pages, and a final paper of 8-10 pages; and 3) attendance and the timely completion of ten of the twelve reflection essays.

Writing is also an important part of my expectations for your participation in the seminar—because writing is an important part of clear and creative thinking as well as of careful analysis. Although you will get written or verbal reactions from me to virtually all your written work, writing instruction is not a part of this course. As with the amount of required reading, you should reconsider your enrollment in the course if you dislike writing or do not feel comfortable with the amount of writing required. Twelve 2-page reflection essays, two 5-page essays and one 8-10-page essay constitute a lot of writing. Note that the reflection essays are un-graded, and may therefore provide an opportunity to relax and experiment with your writing. The two five-page essays and the final paper of 8-10 pages are more formal and will be graded, though there may be some opportunity to write outside the confines of traditional academic papers in some circumstances.

The first essay, due on Friday, March 3, should be 5 pages typed, and should discuss the tension between law and conscience in any of the four works considered. You may wish to try to use this essay to explore and develop ideas about how one or more of the characters in those works helps in understanding the nature of conscience or the expectations we have of law. The second essay, due Friday, April 28 should also be 5 pages, typed. Specific topics will be discussed and decided upon in early April. But you can safely assume that the topics will involve the obligations of conscience and the role of law in a setting where community values are important.

The third and final essay will be 8-10 pages typed, and will be due during finals week. This essay will provide you an opportunity to think about some of the broad themes of the course as you understand them and to show how they are reflected in a number of the readings and films that we have discussed. We will try to generate some specific topics as we go along so that by late April you will have a fairly clear idea of what you may work on for the final.

BOOKS

All the books are at the Jeffrey-Amherst Bookshop textbook annex behind the store in the center of Amherst. There are only a few copies of Blind Ambition (out of print) at the bookstore; those who do not buy Blind Ambition there should order them soon on www.alibris.com or another online seller of used books. Be sure to purchase all the books soon, before Aextras® are sent back to the publishers. Access to Rights on Trial (which is also out of print) will be arranged through the University library and inter-library loan, and you will be informed in April about how this loan program will work.

SCHEDULE OF CLASSES
The works that we will be studying are grouped into three rough categories: The first four works raise basic questions about the relationship of law, power, and individual conscience. The next four raise issues of conscience in the context of community. The final grouping examines the role of law and conscience in the political life of the nation. We consider Watergate and its possible reflection in current concerns about unlimited executive power, the Iran-Contra affair of the 1980's and its lessons for secrecy in government, and the career of Arthur Kinoy, who litigated cases of conscience and the Constitution from the 1940's through his death in 2003.

We start with a lawyer (Thomas More) who could only preserve his conscience at the cost of his career, his family, and ultimately his life. Whether More succeeded in his struggle is a judgment each of us and history may make. We end with another lawyer, Arthur Kinoy, who also tried to find an effective way to make law an instrument of conscience.

* indicates that a reflection essay (2 p.) on a reading is due in the Legal Studies office by Tuesday, 4 p.m. before the class in which the work will be discussed.

 indicates that a reflection essay (2 p.) on a film is due within 48 hours of the class in which film was shown (i.e. by Friday 2 p.m).

2/1 Introduction: The many individual and collective understandings of “conscience”—in morality, religion, science, law, psychology and philosophy. Preliminary reflections on the relationship of law and conscience.

2/8 "A Man For All Seasons"* [you may wish to see the film starring Paul Scofield, but only after reading the play...your reflection essay must be about the play]

2/15 The Stranger*

2/22 “An Enemy of the People”*

3/1 The Front Optional excerpts from Navasky’s Naming Names, about McCarthyism in Hollywood, will be distributed 2/22 to be read in preparation for seeing “The Front.”

1ST 5-PAGE ESSAY DUE FRIDAY, 3/3 IN Legal Studies office BY 2PM

3/8 Long Goodbye: the Deaths of Nancy Cruzan* (Colby). Read to page 218 only. Note that a reflection essay is due on p. 1-218 Tuesday before this class.

3/15 Finish Long Goodbye* & read “Ethics, the Constitution, and the Dying Process: The Case of Theresa Marie Schiavo,” distributed 3/8. A 2nd reflection essay is due on the Tuesday before this class. The 2nd essay should discuss the completed book plus any internet research that you may wish to do on the Schiavo case.

SPRING BREAK

3/29 "Montgomery to Memphis" [3-hr film: in class--be prepared to stay until 5:30]. Be sure that your reflection essay is handed in by Friday, 2 p.m.. You may use email attachment to submit your essay (arons@legal.umass.edu), but I must receive the essay by Friday at 2

4/5 See the film “Amistad” on your own before the 4/5 class, and bring a reflection essay about it with you to class. In class on 4/5, we will discuss both “Amistad” and "Montgomery to Memphis." Your Montgomery to Memphis reflection essay and that of another student will be returned to you with my comments to help start discussion.

4/12 If Not Now, When?* [This class will run only from 2:30 to 3:30 because Passover begins at sundown. Any student who cannot attend the class because of Passover should contact me by 3/29 so that we can work out a longer reflection essay in lieu of class attendance]

4/19 No Class…Monday schedule…

See “All the President’s Men” with Robert Redford and Dustin Hoffman on your own and then start reading John Dean’s Blind Ambition* (it’s a long book but readable if you see the Redford movie about Watergate before you start reading). There is no reflection essay on this film; but there is a reflection essay on the book, due the day before class discussion 5/3.

4/26 "Sophie's Choice" read "Ordinary Heroes" handout in preparation for this class.

2ND 5-PAGE ESSAY DUE FRIDAY 4/28, 2PM, in Legal Studies Office

5/3 Blind Ambition* You should have plenty of time to read it if you see the film “All the President’s Men” shortly after our class of 4/12 and then start reading the book.

5/10 View and discuss Bill Moyers= tape on the Iran/Contra scandal, AThe Constitution in Crisis.@

5/17 Rights On Trial Note that we have made special arrangements for you to get the book from the library, and that it is important to follow the instructions for library loans at the beginning of May.

PLEASE NOTE-- Blind Ambition is out of print and has been for many years. You will therefore have to get it from the Jeffrey-Amherst Textbook annex (where they have only about 8 copies), or from a library, or by ordering a used copy online from www.alibris.com or any other online bookseller that deals with used books. The cost should be very low.

FINAL ESSAY OF 8-10 PAGES DUE DURING EXAM WEEK
