

Torres, students participate in Latino youth health conference

María Idalí Torres, associate professor of Community Health Education, was the keynote speaker at a Feb. 12 seminar, “Discovering Answers - Promoting Health for Latino Youth,” at the Hotel Northampton.

Presented by the Massachusetts Department of Education, the session was designed for school professionals involved in health education, including teachers, administrator, counselors and nurses.

In addition to Torres’ presentation on “Latino Youth Health and Academic Outcomes,” a group of Latino undergraduates who recently graduated from Massachusetts high schools presented their experiences.

A group of Public Health graduate students enrolled in a school health seminar taught by Torres helped document the proceedings of the conference.
