Edmund Gosse, on reading Hebrews with his father: “Some glimmer of a suspicion that he was sailing on the wrong tack must, I should suppose, have broken in upon him when we had reached the eighth and ninth chapters of Hebrews... It is a very noble piece of spiritual casuistry, but it is signally unfitted for the comprehension of a child.”

— Father and Son, 1907