OVERVIEW

Reed Hilderbrand is a nationally recognized, award-winning landscape architectural firm with locations in Cambridge, Massachusetts and New Haven, Connecticut. In the context of a collaborative studio atmosphere, our firm strives for clarity of purpose in all aspects of design; collaborating with other artists and professionals across the country to help colleges and universities, museums, municipalities, and individual homeowners articulate ideas through landscape.

We are seeking qualified candidates who are pursuing a degree in landscape architecture for a paid Winter internship opportunity in the New Haven office. The internship would ideally begin in January and have a duration of 10-12 weeks depending on candidate availability.

DESCRIPTION

Our internship program provides the unique opportunity to gain experience working on both active projects and the firm’s research initiatives. Interns are expected to participate in team meetings, design studies, graphics and production in all phases of the design process. Depending on the needs of the office, interns may also be expected to conduct a research project. Themes from past projects have included storm-water management in public space, analysis of urban soils and their composition, and design standards for urban tree planting. The research component is intended to complement an active project and align with the intern’s individual interests.

REQUIREMENTS

Ideal candidates will have:

- a positive attitude and a proactive approach to work
- the capacity to think conceptually
- strong graphic and verbal communication skills
- the ability to use 3D modeling as both a spatial study and a presentation tool
- proficiency in CAD (Vectorworks a plus), Sketch-up, Rhino and Adobe Creative Suite for the production of both presentation and construction drawings
- the ability to conduct research and compile findings for both internal office presentation and wider distribution
- a willingness to help out in all capacities of office operations
