

March 3, 2016

Re: Call for papers for proposal for special issue on nonviolent civil resistance

We have been encouraged to submit a proposal for a special issue of Journal of Global Security Studies (JoGGS), focusing on the theme of broadening contributions to the literature on nonviolent civil resistance. The Journal of Global Security Studies, a new publication from the International Studies Association, published its first issue in early 2016. The journal aims to publish first-rate work addressing the variety of methodological, epistemological, theoretical, normative, and empirical concerns reflected in the field of global security studies. More importantly, it encourages dialogue, engagement, and conversation between different parts of the field.

For this special issue, we encourage submissions from scholars across the security studies spectrum on topics such as the relationship between nonviolent and violent forms of resistance, the variety and sequencing of tactics employed in nonviolent campaigns, inter- and intra-organizational dynamics within campaigns, the longer-term effects of nonviolent civil resistance, the transnational and global contexts of nonviolent civil resistance, and the geopolitical impacts of civil resistance.

Submissions should include the following: 1) a title page, containing full contact information for all authors; 2) an abstract of approximately 150 words; and 3) an anonymous version of the manuscript. We welcome manuscripts in the various formats encouraged by JoGSS. We plan on bringing together a set of research articles that are each approximately 8,000 to 10,000 words in length (including all elements). We are also interested in submissions that introduce data or methodological innovations. All manuscripts should be sent in .doc or .pdf format. For more information about formatting, please visit: http://jogss.oxfordjournals.org/for_authors/index.html

All submissions can be emailed to both Jessica Braithwaite (jbraith@email.arizona.edu) and Alex Braithwaite (abraith@email.arizona.edu). The deadline for submissions for full consideration is July 31, 2016.

Please forward and distribute this call widely.

Jessica Braithwaite & Alex Braithwaite
University of Arizona

