What is Title IX?

Title IX is a federal law that protects members of the UMass campus community from sex or gender-based discrimination and violence in terms of education and employment. Gender based discrimination, including discrimination based on an individual's gender expression, is prohibited at any UMass affiliated event. UMass is committed to providing an environment free from gender based discrimination, harassment, sexual assault, stalking, or domestic violence. Any member of the campus community who experiences gender based discrimination is entitled to file a complaint (report) of their experience with the Title IX Coordinator and/or members of the Title IX Team.

What is a Title IX Responsible Employee?

University faculty and staff are 'responsible employees' required under Title IX to promptly report any potential incident of sexual assault, sexual harassment, relationship violence, stalking or other assault or harassment involving a UMass student.

Who is a Title IX Responsible Employee?

Most university employees including faculty, staff, coaches, and academic advisors are required to report Title IX violations.

The only exceptions are: law enforcement personnel, licensed clinicians, certified rape crisis or domestic violence counselors, and clergy.

What if I talk or write about a personal experience with sexual violence in a class or paper?

If you share an experience of violence in class via discussion or assignment, and it is clear that the violence occurred while you were affiliated with UMass, the faculty or TA may report to the Dean of Students Office

What happens when the Dean or Title IX Coordinator receives my report?

The Dean or Title IX Coordinator will follow up with you to discuss options for support and accountability.
